

Michael Korber: why the outcome for credit markets ‘looks good’

By Perpetual Asset Management

26 June 2024

Why should investors consider exposure to credit markets right now? That’s something Michael Korber – Perpetual’s managing director, credit and fixed income – explains on Livewire.

- Floating rate credit offering attractive absolute returns
- Australian market less volatile, offers a robust legal framework
- Find out more about the Perpetual Credit Income Trust

Below, Michael discusses the value floating rate credit could offer investors and how his team has embraced a “whole universe” of opportunities to generate returns. He also shares some examples of high-conviction investments within the Perpetual Credit Income Trust \(PCI\) portfolio, including some products with the potential to generate up to 9% in yield.

“At this point in the cycle, we think the total returns are really strong, the predictability of returns is really high and the outcome for investors is looking pretty good,” he says.

Tune in to hear more.
