In the last financial year, Perpetual partnered with individuals, families and trusts to facilitate the distribution of $185 million into communities. This report takes a look at that funding, with a particular focus on the $38 million committed via our IMPACT Philanthropy Application Program \(IPAP\), which seeks applications from not-for-profit organisations for funding from the philanthropic trusts and foundations we manage.

Key highlights:

- Connecting philanthropists: One of our most valued services is connecting philanthropists with effective organisations dedicated to positive social, cultural, and environmental change. IPAP played a significant role in this process, with philanthropists committing $38 million to not-for-profit organisations via the program in 2023.
- Challenges faced: The report highlights the challenges faced by not-for-profit organisations, including the impact of inflation on vulnerable communities, high staff turnover, and increasing cyber threats, especially for organisations collecting sensitive data.
- Funding by sector: Understand funding trends across various sectors, such as social and community wellbeing, medical research, education, animal welfare, arts and culture, health initiatives, and conservation and environment.
- Multi-year commitments: Hear about increasing trend of multi-year commitments and the strategic allocation of funds for core operational support and capacity building.
- Funding focus areas: Learn about Perpetual's focus on supporting specific under-funded groups to facilitate more positive change – Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities, LGBTQI+ individuals and communities, and programs that explicitly support women and girls, with funding statistics.
- Case studies: Mission Australia and the Walter and Eliza Hall Institute of Medical Research share what their IPAP grants set out to achieve.

Looking ahead

As the not-for-profit sector faces increasing demands and challenges, philanthropy remains critical in providing support for communities. The report anticipates a continued hybrid funding approach, combining immediate community needs with long-term initiatives. Trust and collaboration will be paramount in addressing the evolving needs of communities and organisations.
