MARKET COMMENTARY

The first month of the quarter saw equity markets across the globe sell off after a strong first quarter with continued signs that market leadership may be shifting. Global markets fell, with the MSCI World and MSCI All Country World indexes down 3.7% and 3.3%, respectively. This was a giveback from the first quarter, as the broad market indices are still higher for the year. The factors driving the market over the past quarters, such as high momentum, reversed course and stopped outperforming. This month, traditional value stocks with lower price-to-earnings multiples and higher dividend yields outperformed. For the second month in a row, value stocks generally led growth stocks across markets. Only two sectors in the MSCI World Index had positive returns: Energy and Utilities. The rest of the sectors were down for the month. Led lower by the interest rate sensitive Real Estate sector and the Information Technology sector, down 7.2% and 5.7% respectively during the month.

PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

During a month in which value stocks, China, and the UK led the market, the strategy outperformed the MSCI World Index. Contribution to outperformance was broad, as the strategy added value in 9 of the 11 sectors. Specifically, from a sector perspective, the outperformance was attributable to allocation and stock selection, with an underweight to Information Technology boosting performance. Positive stock selection within the Financials, Industrials, and Consumer Discretionary sectors positively contributed to relative performance. Challenging stock selection in the Communication Services, Utilities, and Consumer Staples sectors modestly detracted from relative performance. The relative positive impacts from allocation were mostly due to the growth/value dispersion mentioned earlier in this commentary, as the portfolio was helped by the underweight to the Information Technology sector and overweight positioning in the Energy and Utilities sectors. Regionally, the outperformance was driven by stock selection in continental Europe, and North America, with positive allocation impacts from Emerging Markets. Stock selection in the UK was modestly negative, although an overweight to one of the better performing geographies helped.

Great Wall Motor Co. Ltd. Class H positively contributed to relative performance in April after the Chinese automotive OEM reported solid quarterly results in a fierce competitive environment. Sales numbers were on target to be slightly ahead while exports, primarily to Russia and Brazil, continue to be strong. The company continues using a bifurcated pricing strategy in the highly competitive Chinese market, with some brands competing for price at lower margins, while keeping its larger SUV models as higher margin products to protect overall profit given strong market leadership in these niche areas.

Boliden AB positively contributed to relative performance during the month after reporting quarterly results and a strike impacting performance showed signs of abating. While there was operational disruption in the results due to the strike, spot prices for the Finnish metal miner remain strong for copper and gold. The company currently trades at 13x forward earnings with a dividend yield of 2.1%.

Humana Inc. underperformed in April on continued higher utilisation rates for its health insurance products. The higher utilisation trends in 2023 do not appear transitory, leading Humana to slash its earnings guidance to half of the level previously predicted for 2024 early in the year. The first quarter results were in line with this guidance, but the pricing and utilisation picture for 2025 remains unclear until bids for that year conclude. While the pace of the recovery remains uncertain, the likelihood of recovery over multiple years remains high. Managed Care Organisations continue to struggle, but Humana remains an attractive asset that may be oversold on pessimism.

Lithia Motors, Inc. detracted from relative performance in April given slightly weaker than expected first quarter earnings due largely to higher SG&A expenses and continued normalising (lower) new car gross profit per unit. The market remains myopically focused on this unit margin (admittedly elevated post COVID), while ignoring volume growth and additive contributions by Finance & Insurance and Parts & Service penetration. Despite a softer quarter, we see multiple avenues to earnings growth. We believe the ~9x 2024 EPS multiple undervalues higher normalised earnings and future free cash flow generation.

OUTLOOK

The market finally paused in April from a strong rally over the past five quarters, with some markets retreating from highs. The strong returns over the past year may have outpaced the fundamentals of companies, as inflation remains above the 2% targets favored by central banks. Markets remain hopefully positioned that 2024 will be the year in which inflation is under control and monetary policy is more accommodative. However, the current market optimism is still pricing in more accommodative monetary policy for 2024 in the form of rate cuts in the U.S. and Europe that began to fade as the number of expected rate cuts for the year fell throughout the quarter. Earnings multiples remain elevated and earnings growth estimates are still above 10%. A negative return environment could recur if there is any disappointment from the current forecast of multiple rate cuts in 2024, which could lead to multiple compression among more expensive stocks. As macro issues tend to swing markets up and down, it is important to remember that the best time to find value is when markets are fearful or exuberant about a small opportunity set and are ultimately overlooking good companies with solid operating fundamentals.
